However, it wasn't until much later that anyone realized this wasn't just another building... It was an icon of a people's souls... an image of a nation's heart. The Taj Mahal stood for hundreds of years, a reminder of a great love that transcended time. Ten years ago, after two centuries of gradual decay, we decided to do something about it. What we wanted to do was to save the tomb of the one they loved. When we learned about the condition of the monument, we realized that it was in grave danger. The problems started with the core shoring. It turned out that this hadn't been done since the 15th century. The shifting sands were becoming a major threat. The structure of the building is in dire need of restoration, we didn't even begin to talk about the interior. It was obvious that the place required a tremendous amount of work, if it was to last a long time. We have outlined the requirements and planned a five year schedule. The first task was to solidify the structure, making sure that the building was stable and that there would be no further shrinkage. We then decided to do the restoration without removing the marble. About 80% of the marble in the Taj Mahal has gone, it is buried under earth that is constantly eroding. A good portion of what was left has been damaged and is now in a poor state of repair. We just couldn't remove and replace the marble that has already been eroded. The Taj Mahal is a testimony to the artistry and love that was in a bygone era. It has become a marvel of the world, a wonder of the ages, but as it changes beyond repair, it is once again becoming a tomb. 32:29
